Arthroscopic implants are specialized medical devices used in arthroscopic surgery, a minimally invasive surgical technique for diagnosing and treating various joint-related conditions. Arthroscopy involves inserting a small camera called an arthroscope into the joint through a small incision, allowing the surgeon to visualize and access the joint without the need for open surgery. Arthroscopic implants are used to repair or replace damaged structures within the joint, such as ligaments, tendons, cartilage, or bone.

Arthroscopic implants come in various forms, depending on the specific joint and procedure being performed. They can include anchors, screws, sutures, pins, or other fixation devices made from biocompatible materials like titanium or absorbable materials. These implants are designed to stabilize and reinforce the joint structures, promote healing, and restore normal joint function. They are often used in procedures such as ligament reconstruction, rotator cuff repair, meniscus repair, and joint cartilage restoration.
