Pet cancer therapeutics refers to the medications and treatment modalities used to diagnose, manage, and treat cancer in pets, primarily dogs and cats. Cancer is a significant health concern in companion animals, and pet cancer therapeutics aim to improve the quality of life and overall survival of animals affected by this disease. These therapeutics encompass a wide range of options, including chemotherapy, radiation therapy, targeted therapies, immunotherapy, and surgical interventions.

Chemotherapy, similar to its use in human medicine, involves the administration of anticancer drugs to kill or slow the growth of cancer cells. Radiation therapy utilizes high-energy beams to target and destroy cancer cells in specific areas of the body. Targeted therapies are medications that selectively target specific molecules or pathways involved in cancer growth and progression. Immunotherapy harnesses the pet's immune system to recognize and eliminate cancer cells. Surgical interventions involve the removal of tumors or affected tissues to treat cancer locally. The choice of pet cancer therapeutics depends on factors such as the type and stage of cancer, the pet's overall health, and the goals of treatment, which may include palliative care, tumor control, or potential cure.
