

Business Reporter: Navigating regulatory changes on a global level

How can a digital tool guide businesses through a shifting regulatory maze?

LONDON, UNITED KINGDOM, May 30, 2023 /EINPresswire.com/ -- In an article published on Business Reporter, Roseanne Spagnuolo, Chief Content Officer of regulatory intelligence provider VIXIO talks about how navigating the regulatory landscape on their own has become challenging for global businesses, especially in fast developing sectors such as payments. In high-growth digital sectors, where customer data has become accessible for whole ecosystems, regulators have doubled down on protecting customers, and organisations oblivious to dynamically changing rules are exposing themselves to high fines, as well as reputational damage. However, having a deep understanding of regulatory trends in foreign markets is critical not only from a compliance perspective, but also when making decisions about entering a new market or working out an expansion strategy.

Tools that help a business stay up to speed with regulatory changes in, sometimes, dozens of different markets are also key when having to demonstrate to regulatory bodies that a company takes compliance seriously. VIXIO's automated Horizon Scanning tool monitors more than 120 markets and informs clients regarding how current and future changes are relevant to their operation and business strategy. Currently, there are at least three major pieces of legislation in the pipeline only in the EU regulating digital resilience (DORA), crypto assets (MiCA) and payments, while in the UK, consumer duty is expected to have far-reaching implications regarding how businesses serve their clients. Horizon Scanning liberates businesses from sifting through vast amounts of information to make the necessary adjustments.
