NAHQ will share insights on improving healthcare quality and safety through the workforce.

CHICAGO, IL, UNITED STATES, May 31, 2023 /EINPresswire.com/ -- The National Association for Healthcare Quality® (NAHQ) has been invited to share its insights on improving healthcare quality and safety through the workforce at the 2023 thINc360 – The Healthcare Innovation Congress, held in Washington, D.C. Scheduled from June 20-22, the event will be held at the Grand Hyatt Washington.

"The time to rethink and rebrand quality is now – and leadership is urgently needed to take healthcare to the next level," said Stephanie Mercado, CAE, CPHQ, chief executive officer and executive director of NAHQ. "Leaders aiming to get their quality programs on track should not plan to go back to the programs of the past. Instead, they need to deploy fresh thinking about quality and how to achieve it."

Mercado is slated to present a keynote on "Rebranding Quality" at the conference on June 22.

NAHQ's Senior Vice President, Organizational Workforce Solutions, Richard Bobos, is also scheduled to lead a panel discussion on "Taking Care of Our Healthcare Workers by Reimagining Workplace Culture." His esteemed panel will include: David Weisman, PhD, CPXP, FPCC, the chief experience officer at NYC Health + Hospitals; Mohan Nair, CEO of Emerge® USA, and an Edmund Hillary Fellow - Investor, New Zealand; and Nidia S. Williams, PhD, vice president, quality & safety, at Lifespan in Rhode Island.

"This national conference is considered to be a multi-stakeholder event that delivers a 360-degree perspective to drive healthcare forward," Bobos stated. "That is what we will address: advancing the healthcare quality workforce across the continuum of care...because quality can't wait!"
