Palacio de Mirabel | Mirabel, Spain

A secluded and private retreat in the Spanish hills

The Las Villuercas region of Extremadura is a well-known getaway destination frequented by HNW individuals, including CEOs, politicians, and more. Situated 6 kilometers from Guadalupe, it holds significance as a noteworthy village in Spain. The region offers privacy and natural beauty, making it an ideal retreat for those seeking seclusion. This estate holds historical value. The Palacio Granja de Mirabel encompasses 1,500 acres of diverse flora, including chestnut, oak, and strawberry trees, among others. The forests are home to various wildlife species, including

Over time, this palace has served as the residence for religious orders, Catholic monarchs, and modern millionaires. Queen Isabella of Spain once referred to it as "her paradise" after spending time there. The palace has even attained the status of a National Monument. The walled property showcases Moorish gardens with fountains, a chapel adorned with Flemish frescos, and a baroque altarpiece from Rubens' atelier. Additionally, a secondary chapel houses the most notable Gothic paintings in the region. Ornate carvings and beautiful, red-tiled roofs enhance the exterior of the building. The 1,934-square-meter mansion sits on 584 hectares of land. The XIV-century Mudejar facade stands as an exceptional example of the era. This distinct estate is a certified national treasure and among the most significant 'Mudejar' palaces in private ownership.

Guadalupe, a historically significant town in medieval Spain, held a pivotal role as a resting place for armies and kings amidst their battles. Recognizing its strategic value, the monks from the monastery built Mirabel, a residence intended for the personal use of Queen Elizabeth. Historical records indicate that Queen Elizabeth stayed at Mirabel on multiple occasions, with at least 12 documented visits, including an extended stay of over six months. Guadalupe witnessed two notable events: the triumphant return of the "conquista de Granada" and the warm reception of Christopher Columbus after his second voyage to America in 1496. While Columbus had previously visited Guadalupe twice before his discovery of the New World in April 1486 and April 1487, there is no documented evidence of his stay at Mirabel following his first journey, unlike his documented visit after his second voyage. In the early 20th century, the esteemed presence of Alfonso XIII, the last Spanish king, also graced Mirabel.

Cáceres serves as the capital of the Extremadura region in Spain. Located near the Sierra de la Mosca hills, this city holds historical significance as a part of the renowned pilgrim's route, the Camino de Santiago. The old town, known as Parte Antigua, represents a medieval walled town characterized by a blend of Roman, Moorish, Northern Gothic, and Italian Renaissance architecture. It comes as no surprise that the city has earned the distinction of being a UNESCO World Heritage City. Take a leisurely stroll through its charming streets and immerse yourself in its architecture and history. Indulge in the local cuisine, which includes pastries, cheese, olive oil, and more. Savor a glass of the local red wine while enjoying the Mediterranean climate. This semi-secluded town provides a private experience amidst the backdrop of the Spanish countryside.
