In our speedlight evolution time, governments are often too occupied to keep up with the evolving definition of marriage, resulting in a gradual shift towards a cohabitation-focused society. The number of cohabitating couple families grew faster than married-couple families, up 25.8 percent over the decade. The sure consequence of such a change is that relationship formation becomes more varied across the globe, states Elyakim Kislev Ph.D.

Web3Wed aims to solve this issue by leveraging cutting-edge blockchain technology. The project offers a platform for blockchain weddings.

"We recognize the need for a modernized understanding of matrimony that adapts to the changing needs of individuals," says Yury Reut, the visionary behind Web3wed.io.
