- Have enough non-perishable food and water for three days
- Flashlights with extra batteries
- First aid kit
- Blankets
- Battery-powered radio

Extra cash on hand is essential

Store important documents such as birth certificates in a waterproof container

Additionally, if your home or business is in an area prone to hurricanes or other natural disasters, the additional recommendations should be considered:

Purchasing an emergency generator

Having sandbags readily available in case of flooding

Secure homes with shutters or impact windows if possible

Review homeowners insurance policy preferably before season begins

Create an emergency plan with family members that outlines where to go in case of evacuation and how to contact each other should cell phone service go down.

It's also important to protect your property from wind damage. Be sure your roof has no loose shingles or tiles and inspect gutters for any blockages that could cause water damage if not addressed before the storm hits.

Consider using hurricane straps or clips on your roof rafters as additional protection against strong winds. Lastly, make sure all trees near your home or business are properly trimmed before the high winds of a hurricane arrive.

Having adequate insurance coverage is just as important as having the right supplies when preparing for a hurricane season—or any other natural disaster. Before signing up for a policy (or renewing one), make sure it covers all potential damages caused by flooding or high winds from a hurricane or other violent storm events. To make sure you're covered during times of need, research local companies that offer policies tailored specifically for hurricanes so that you will be adequately prepared ahead of time.

Once a hurricane passes through an area, there may still be risks associated with cleanup efforts:

Use caution when cleaning debris fields created by fallen trees or damaged buildings. Wear protective clothing such as long pants, sleeves along with sturdy work shoes to avoid injury.

Inspect areas that were affected by floods before entering them- flood waters can pick up dangerous bacteria from sewage systems which can pose serious health risks.

Keep in mind that some materials left behind after a hurricane can be hazardous waste so it is always best to contact local officials about how best to handle these materials safely rather than trying to remove these materials without proper equipment or training.

With these tips from Home Safe Claims, individuals can be better prepared for this hurricane season. The company has many years of experience helping clients prepare before and after storms and understands that this time of year can be a stressful and daunting one for many individuals, especially in coastal areas. By taking these steps, homeowners and businesses alike can have peace of mind knowing that basic steps have been taken to protect health and safety from Mother Nature's wrath while minimizing financial losses should disaster strike this season.
