networks. Development of the telecom service assurance industry is increasing as Internet of Things (IoT) and cloud computing usage is rising

However, various compatibility issues of telecom service assurance is a major factor, which could restrain market revenue growth. When distinct telecom network components, such as hardware, software, or protocols, are incompatible with one another, compatibility problems may arise. For instance, a new device might not operate with an older piece of hardware or a new software update might not work with an established network protocol. These incompatibility problems can result in service interruptions or a decline in service quality, which can render customers unsatisfied and even cause the telecom operator to lose money.
