Every healthcare insurer has their unique network of contracted doctors and hospitals. This is especially true when it comes to the myriad of Affordable Care Act plans. Over the years, there has been a noticeable trend among insurers nationwide to offer smaller networks of healthcare providers. For patients, this means a more difficult time finding providers who will accept their insurance. Should this trend continue, individuals and families will eventually reach a point where they either cannot find in-network providers and have to pay more for out-of-network care or travel farther from their homes for the appropriate in-network care. This includes to find those providers who accept health insurance in Arlington.

Rick Thornton, a Arlington health insurance agent who routinely studies healthcare reform and topics to keep his clients aware of what's happening with their healthcare options, said one of the main concerns Americans have had for years is struggling to find in-network providers for even the most mundane healthcare issues, from the flu to broken bones and everything in between. Thornton said time will tell if healthcare officials and insurers nationwide can find a way to stem the tide and expand individual networks to reduce the squeeze on millions of Americans.
