challenges associated with brain health to enhance the quality of life for individuals affected by Alzheimer's, Parkinson's, and other neurodegenerative diseases.

The SIP Innovation Olympics will span three months, during which competing student teams will develop innovative business concepts, products or services that address the complex challenges surrounding brain health and healthy aging. By harnessing the collective creativity and passion of the emerging generation, Social Impact Partners aims to foster groundbreaking solutions that will have a lasting impact on individuals and communities.

"Together with a consortium of global for-profit and nonprofit leaders, we believe it is critical to engage a younger generation to be part of the solution to better brain health," said Sarah Hoit, Co-Founder and Chairman of Social Impact Partners. "Through our Innovation Olympics and Global Business Plan Contest and the application of diverse perspectives, we believe that these student teams will redefine the boundaries of brain health and healthy aging solutions, ultimately improving the lives of millions affected by neurodegenerative diseases."

The SIP Innovation Olympics have garnered support from prestigious organizations and industry leaders committed to driving social impact. Companies such as Sodexo, Blue Zones, Silverado Senior Living, Vitality Society, UsAgainstAlzheimer's, CaringKind, Oxford Brain Diagnostics, Spinnaker Venture Partners, Direct Supply and Ivy Tree Advisors have generously agreed to participate in the event from a collaborative organization perspective, providing invaluable resources and expertise to nurture the students' entrepreneurial endeavors.

"The opportunity for Blue Zones to be part of a competition like this that empowers students to be part of new solutions in brain health is encouraging," said Nick Buettner, the VP of Product. "The healthy living space will greatly benefit from the collaboration, sharing of best practices and innovations these teams will discover."

Participating universities include Dartmouth College, Tuck School of Business, University of Calgary, Harvard Business School, Indian Institute of Management Madras, S.P. Mandali's Welingkar Education and the Asian Institute of Management. These esteemed institutions have chosen their most promising teams to compete in this global platform, creating an unparalleled atmosphere of innovation and collaboration.

Over the course of the competition, the student teams will receive guidance and mentorship from industry experts, renowned academics, and seasoned professionals in the field of brain health and neurodegenerative diseases. Their progress will be evaluated by a distinguished panel of judges, who will assess the feasibility, scalability, and potential impact of each concept.

The SIP Innovation Olympics will culminate in a grand finale event, where the top teams will showcase their solutions and compete for coveted prizes, recognition, and the opportunity to further develop their ideas with Social Impact Partners and its sponsors.
