In addition, rapid change in climate due to global warming had adversely impacted weather patterns giving rise to erratic rainfall, drought, and desertification, thereby declining agricultural productivity. This has led to an increase in global demand for food and therefore has led to rising demand for alternative farming practices such as hydroponics, which is expected to propel revenue growth of the market further.

Rise in desertification is a significant factor that is expected to increase demand for hydroponics.

Desertification leads to persistent degradation of land by climatic variations and human activities and negatively impacts agriculture output. Countries with rising populations are facing a rapid increase in desertification. For instance, according to Desertification and Land Degradation Atlas of India published in June 2021 by the Space Applications Centre (SAC), Ahmedabad, around 97.85 million hectares (mha) of India's Total Geographical Area (TGA) of 328.72 mha underwent land degradation during 2018-19, and about 83.69 million hectares (mha) of land underwent desertification in 2018-19 which was more significant than the 81.48 million hectares (mha) in 2003-2005 and 82.64 million hectares (mha) in 2011-13. This is expected to increase demand for hydroponics systems and significantly propel market revenue growth.
