Potato starch refer to a natural starch obtained by crushing potatoes, which releases free starch in the form of a milky liquid. Starch grains are found in the cells of the potato plant's root tubers. The potatoes are crushed to extract the starch, and the starch grains are liberated from the destroyed cells. The starch then is washed and dried to powder. Potato starch has huge oval spherical granules that range in size from 5 to 100 µm. Potato starch is a highly refined starch with little protein or fat. This gives the powder a clear white color, and the cooked starch has the normal properties of a neutral flavor, good clarity, high binding strength, lengthy texture, and a low tendency to foam or yellow the solution. These common features are used in a variety of food and technical applications such as in the paper and chemical industry.
