It all started in 2008 when California decriminalized the possession of small amounts of cannabis. The passage of this law set the stage for the growth of the cannabis industry in areas like San Gabriel Valley. However, it wasn't until the introduction of Proposition 64 in 2016, which legalized recreational cannabis, that the local cannabis industry truly began to bloom.

Since then, the San Gabriel Valley has witnessed a surge in the number of dispensaries and

As dispensaries began to open, brands such as started to gain recognition in the market. Their products, often showcased in these dispensaries, became part of a growing portfolio of high-quality, lab-tested cannabis goods available in the area.

A significant development in the local cannabis industry has been the rise of 'budtenders' – professionals trained to guide consumers through the cannabis purchasing process. The knowledge and expertise of these individuals have played an integral role in transforming the cannabis shopping experience into an educational journey. This aspect of the industry is particularly notable in the San Gabriel Valley, where budtenders are revered for their industry knowledge and customer service skills.

Beyond dispensaries and retail, the San Gabriel Valley has also seen growth in ancillary cannabis businesses. This includes cultivation, manufacturing, distribution, and even cannabis tourism.
