Definition:

Coconut alcohol, also known as coconut palm alcohol or coconut arrack, refers to an alcoholic beverage produced from the fermented sap of coconut palm trees (Cocos nucifera). It is a traditional alcoholic beverage that is popular in certain regions where coconut palms are abundant, such as Southeast Asia. The process of producing coconut alcohol involves tapping the flowering buds of the coconut palm tree and collecting the sap, which is sometimes referred to as "toddy" or "neera." The sap is obtained by making incisions in the flowering stalks and collecting the liquid that flows out. This sap is naturally sweet and contains sugars, nutrients, and trace amounts of alcohol.
