Stellar Office Chairs Manufacturer

The second-largest office chairs and furniture market in Europe is found in the United Kingdom, where non-specialist merchants control the industry's distribution network. The need for office chairs and furniture is constantly growing in the nation as a result of a strengthening economy, rising company confidence levels, expanding firms, and increased spending on new office space and furniture.

The country's office chair and furniture market is split into two main segments: the corporate sector, which is served by UK and international brand office furniture suppliers, either directly to end-users or through fit-out specialists and furniture dealers, and the small office sector, which is primarily supplied by low-cost producing countries like China, Turkey etc. through mail orders, the Internet, and retail outlets. According to estimates, the office and contract sub-sectors account for 30% of the UK's total furniture production revenue. This sector manufactures a variety of office chairs & furniture, including workstations, seats, tables, cabinets, and other pieces for the workplace.

The advantage that Stellar brings to the table now, with an exclusive presence in the UK is to be able to cater to small as well as large B2B customers who can benefit from the high-quality and low-cost furniture on the back of large-scale manufacturing in China.

"The United Kingdom's office furniture market relies heavily on imports and they account for nearly 35% of the share. Some of the major importing countries are China, Germany, France, Italy, and other European countries. The United Kingdom's imports of office furniture were worth almost 215 million British pounds in 2019, of which around 109.3 million came from European Union member states. The imports have decreased in 2020 to 102.8 due to Covid-19 and the transformation of work culture as various companies have opted to work from home."
