Slated to discuss decarbonization while taking advantage of carbon credits, Oren will show attendees how to navigate the complexities of an ever-changing decarbonization regulatory framework to take advantage of the numerous federal and state programs offering subsidies, tax credits, and more.

Many companies looking for assistance to decarbonize their operations tap the expertise of EcoEngineers, a Des Moines, Iowa-based renewable energy consulting, auditing, and advisory firm.

“Companies come to us wanting to decarbonize their operations but just don’t know how to get started,” said Oren. “There are a number of moving pieces in the process. Everything is constantly changing, with new carbon markets emerging along with complex subsidies and tax credits to assist decarbonization.”

Oren will discuss the U.S. federal Renewable Fuel Standards (RFS), the California Low Carbon Fuel Standards (LCFS), proposed standards for Oregon and Washington, the Canadian Federal Program, and the European market, which is just exploding. She will also touch on voluntary (non-governmental organized) carbon credit markets, which are expanding rapidly.

Oren’s presentation will cover key considerations of the various project types and how they intersect with regulated and voluntary carbon credit markets, and how renewable natural gas (RNG) projects manage the constantly changing landscape of carbon credit markets and pricing volatility.
