The demand for mascarpone cheese has been increasing in household consumption as well as industrial use. One of the key factors driving the demand for mascarpone cheese is its varied application in the food industry as a substitute for cream, in desserts, sauces, ready-to-cook dishes, soups and others. Furthermore, the demand for mascarpone cheese is also growing due to its functional and organoleptic properties as it is used for thickening and binding purposes in many food recipes.

The varied applications of mascarpone cheese in the food industry, including as a substitute of cream in desserts, ready-to-cook dishes, sauces, and soups is one of the key factors fueling the mascarpone cheese market. Currently, mascarpone cheese witnesses massive demand for sweet and savory foods both in the commercial and retail food industry. Besides this, mascarpone cheese finds use for thickening and binding purposes in many recipes due to its functional and organoleptic properties. The higher shelf life and functional properties are some other attributes of mascarpone cheese.

Further, mascarpone cheese being a vegetarian cheese is gaining popularity among the growing vegetarian population in Western countries. Exponential growth of the hospitality sector is expanding the sales horizon of the mascarpone cheese market. Gourmet desserts, savory dishes, sauces, and beverages served in luxury hotels use specialty dairy products, including mascarpone cheese.
