Osseointegration, the fusion of the implant with the jawbone, is a vital process of successful dental implantation.”

Dental implants are primarily sought after by individuals missing one or more teeth. Patients who have experienced tooth loss or are at risk of losing a tooth due to disease, age, or trauma are the most suitable candidates for implant treatment. It is important to note that the strength of the jawbone and the health of the gum tissue plays a crucial role in the dental implant process.

“Osseointegration, the fusion of the implant with the jawbone, is a vital process of successful dental implantation,” says Dr. Matthew Lang, dentist in Center Valley. “Patients with insufficient jawbone density or gum disease may face challenges in achieving proper bonding between the implant and the jawbone. Similarly, individuals with existing oral diseases, such as tooth decay or gum disease, may also need to address these issues before undergoing dental implant treatment,” Lang continues.

Dr. Lang and his team work closely with patients to help them achieve a successful treatment. Success rates for dental implants are well over 90%. Supplemental procedures to help improve the likelihood of a successful treatment are also available.

In addition to dental implants in Center Valley, Dr. Lang and his team also offer dental crowns, tooth whitening, full-arch implants, and general dentistry services.
