Definition:

AFCC (American Fair Credit Council) is an organization that represents and promotes the interests of debt settlement companies in the United States. Debt settlement is a financial strategy that involves negotiating with creditors to settle outstanding debts for less than the full amount owed. The AFCC is a trade association that sets ethical standards and provides certification for debt settlement companies. It's important to note that while the AFCC sets ethical standards for its members, not all debt settlement companies are members of the organization. It's crucial for consumers to thoroughly research and evaluate any debt settlement company they consider working with, whether or not they are affiliated with the AFCC. This includes reviewing customer reviews, checking for appropriate licenses and certifications, understanding the fees involved, and considering alternative options for debt relief, such as credit counseling or debt consolidation.
