"Reviewed By K.C. Finn for Readers' Favorite

The Girl Who Cloned Lightning is a work of fiction by author Cliff Ratza in the thriller, suspense, and drama subgenres and forms the fourth novel in the epic Lightning Brain Series of adventure romances. It is best suited to mature teen and adult readers. The adventure continues as the danger in cyberspace becomes even more life-threatening than the advent of terror in the real world. Co-existing with a split personality inside her head, Electra and Alisha develop a new way to battle the many paradoxes of their world. When Electra makes a brilliant discovery at the same time as surprising family histories are revealed, the stakes could not be higher, and the world may change forever in its wake.

Author Cliff Ratza has delivered an epic tale so far in this series, and every novel had me waiting with bated breath to see what the next surprise would be. I like that each part of the story has a distinct feel, and in this novel, the sense of technology, innovation, and the dangers of the cyber-world took pride of place as the dark central theme. But all of the elements that make Electra the suave, brilliant, and engaging heroine she is are still present, with added new layers of psychology after her experiences with Alisha that are brilliantly played and become integral and believable within the main plot. Overall, The Girl Who Cloned Lightning is a novel that adds yet more excitement and suspense to this thrilling series and I can't wait to see how the final events of this plot play out!"
