“This is the first time a local developer has made the unique and costly effort to deconstruct donatable goods and assets prior to releasing a property to general salvage, with the intention of that first step being to generate a profound positive impact to local charitable and nonprofit organizations and to the environment as a whole” said Evelyn Bertolucci, a resident volunteer of Biscayne 21 and Founder of Give4Good. “TRD is a unicorn in this new innovative journey, where building deconstruction can follow a new blueprint which will involve two steps: the first being a new progressive salvage and repurpose of all useful chattels and assets prior to step two - which is the general more wasteful deconstruction process. We have helped create a new set of developer best practices on behalf of our community and governments in Miami and Florida as well as a new blueprint which is transformational and should be adopted by every major development process throughout the nation. We are calling out to all developers” continued Ms. Bertolucci, “to use this new TRD blueprint for deconstruction and adopt this new methodology to do the right thing for local charities and the environment”.

All participating charities extend their sincere gratitude to the TRD executives who cleared the red tape to make this donation campaign a reality with special thanks going to Taylor B. Collins and Reid Boren, Managing Partners and Founders at Two Roads Development LLC.

Give4Good invites other local charities and nonprofit organizations to participate in this important initiative for those they serve.

Journalists and media professionals are also invited to support this campaign by showcasing the impact of TRD and G4G's efforts.

Please join us in spreading the word about this remarkable project.
