Jellies and gummies refer to a type of confectionery product made using a hydrocolloid (also known as a stabilizer) that acts as a binding element to hold sugar syrup with a high moisture content. Gummies are confectionery products made of gelatin and have a sticky texture, transparent colors, and a sweet, chewy consistency. Jellies have a more solid texture than gummies as they do not contain gelatin, and they use carbohydrates such as pectin, potato starch, maize starch, and tapioca.
