I am grateful to have an unusual history of waterborne adventures. I want to share my stories and experiences with the audience”

Jane Lawton Baldridge

Jane's artwork has been exhibited in numerous exhibitions since 1974 and has been shown in venues like Lincoln Center, Times Square, The Louvre, Museum of Computer Art, Mint Museum, Cameron Museum of Art, Fayetteville Museum of Art, and at the World Festival of Art on Paper in Slovenia. She also has an art print in the Library of Congress.

A licensed boat captain who lived at sea aboard a boat, on or near the water her entire life, Jane has been painting moving water for decades using various media. She has a deep respect for the ocean, tides, currents and wind. Her paintings and passion resonate in her advocacy for the water on our planet. Jane has been involved with environmental and educational groups promoting protections for our watersheds all the way to the vast oceans.

“My paintings are stories about my life on the water,” said Jane. “Perfect days spent scudding along on the wavelets that reflect diamonds or bashing headlong into waves trying to survive the storm. I am grateful to have an unusual history of waterborne adventures. I want to share my stories and experiences with the audience.”

Spanning five decades, Jane’s work has included found objects, clay and sculptural stained glass as well as drawing, painting and groundbreaking digital media. She now mixes all of that experience into rich visual stories about things she is passionate about.

“Navigation Oceana strives to take you on a visual cruise through the Atlantic to the Caribbean and Gulf of Mexico on over to the Pacific and even the South China Sea. Some days are stormy and some days tranquil, but all hold emotional beauty.

Join me on my journey, reflect in my recap; most importantly learn to breathe deep the salt air.”
