Definition:

Fast-casual restaurant refers to the restaurants which offer the convenience and quickness of fast food establishments without the full service of fine dining. This type of restaurant offers counter service instead of table service. It provides customizable healthier meals options and menu items prepared with fresher ingredients than fast food. Fast-casual restaurants commonly serve salads, sandwiches, burritos, and burgers. This type of restaurant has become increasingly popular because it balances the quality of casual dining with the speed of fast food.
