LAS VEGAS, NEVADA, UNITED STATES, August 31, 2023 /EINPresswire.com/ --

Las Vegas rapper and personality Robbie Tripp continues to make noise online with his most recent single and music video project, the highly-anticipated "I Wanna Have Fun..." which features a big name on the production side thanks to superproducer Andrew Dawson, best known for his work on Kanye West's bestselling albums such as Late Registration (2005), Graduation (2007), My Beautiful Dark Twisted Fantasy (2010), Watch the Throne (2011), and more.

Robbie Tripp, known for his viral hits such as "Big Girl Banger" and "Chubby Sexy", as well as creating polarizing internet moments such as the iconic "curvy wife" post, has been on nothing short of a creative crusade in 2023. Through his independent media and production company Desert Money, releasing seven singles and six music videos to his millions of followers across social media, produced by. He describes his latest single "I Wanna Have Fun..." as "flirtatious and playful" and calls it "the perfect cherry on top" of a year that has seen Tripp transcend from body positive influencer to rising hip hop artist in the internet era.

Tripp shares that the seeds of his most recent collaboration with Andrew Dawson began years ago when the two connected through a mutual friend in the music industry as they were both living in Scottsdale, Arizona at the time. Robbie's radio-friendly Phoenix Suns anthems such as "Suns in 4"—which was named by the Phoenix New Times as "Song of the Year—had already made waves in Arizona and beyond, and Tripp says it was just a matter of "waiting for the right idea" to work with Dawson, whose list of credits include Kanye West, Jay Z, Tyler the Creator, Childish Gambino, The Rolling Stones, and Linkin Park.
