Recent years have seen the emergence of litigation funding as a rapidly expanding and highly desirable asset class. During the projection period, the rising number of conflicts between businesses operating in the same industry globally would create growth prospects for the litigation funding investment market.

The growth of the litigation finance investment market is due to the global expansion of the legal services industry. The demand for litigation funding is being driven by the expansion of the legal services industry and the rise in the number of complicated legal cases being brought.

Many parties are searching for affordable financing options to assist their legal pursuits as the cost of litigation keeps rising, giving the sector the required boost for growth. Legal disputes are frequently viewed as complex in India, where parties must first look for a competent attorney before having the funds to cover the charges, which could be significant given how long it typically takes for a case to be settled in court. For instance, according to information from the National Judicial Data Grid, there were almost 43.5 million pending cases in India's courts as of May 1, 2023.

The introduction of Blockchain technology and investment funds, including hedge funds and private equity firms fuels the global market growth. According to statistics, about 3% of people on the planet currently use blockchain technology. These institutional investors significantly increase the sector's financial resources and technological know-how, which will aid in its development and professionalization. As a result of this development, litigation funding companies can access new markets, increase their clientele, and become major players across numerous geographies.

Commercial litigation funding segment generated US$ 5,318.92 million in revenue in 2022

The commercial litigation funding segment dominated the global market. In 2022, the segment generated US$ 5,318.92 million in revenue. With a predicted compound annual growth rate (CAGR) of 6.7%, commercial litigation funding is likely to maintain its dominant position during the projection period.

The rising complexity and costs of legal conflicts in the business world are driving the demand for commercial litigation funding. More people and companies are aware of their legal rights and are prepared to take legal action to safeguard their interests. Due to the increased propensity to litigate business matters as a result of this increased awareness, this market niche is expanding in the area.

Business segment generated US$ 9,265.46 million in sales in 2022

The business segment is the major end-user of the litigation funding investment market. In 2022, this segment generated US$ 9,265.46 million in sales. Businesses predominate among end users, demonstrating the corporate sector's significant acceptance of lawsuit finance.

Litigation funding provides a practical way to handle the high costs of legal processes when businesses deal with legal issues. Businesses can gain the resources required to pursue lawsuits without jeopardizing their financial viability by obtaining external funding.

Businesses can also utilize litigation finance as a tactical tool to handle difficult legal issues and safeguard their interests. The business segment is essential in fostering the growth and evolution of the worldwide litigation finance investment market due to its sizeable revenue contribution.
