The Addiction Medicine Doctor Shortage

The United States faces a dire shortage of Addiction Medicine Doctors, and the numbers are startling. It's estimated that there are 2–6 million Americans struggling with opioid use disorder. Shockingly, this leaves approximately one addiction physician for every 450–1,300 individuals in need of treatment. This alarming disparity underscores the urgent need for more healthcare professionals dedicated to addiction medicine.

Lack of Diversity in the Addiction

Dr. Darren Lipshitz, MD: A Beacon of Hope

It's estimated that there are 2–6 million Americans struggling with opioid use disorder.

Medicine Field

In addition to the scarcity of addiction physicians, the field lacks racial and ethnic diversity. Most practicing addiction psychiatrists are White, and in 2018, underrepresented minority groups made up less than 0.1% of the pool of addiction medicine and psychiatry fellows. This lack of diversity can present a significant barrier to improving treatment access and retention, especially for Black and Latinx patients.
