

Healthworks' Mission: To Bridge the Healthcare Workforce Shortage Gap

London, United Kingdom – In response to the current and concerning healthcare workforce shortage – predicted to reach a staffing gap of 10 million professionals by 2030 (World Health Organization) – HealthWorks is pleased to reaffirm its unwavering dedication to placing senior management candidates into services that are in crisis.

The committed care management recruitment agency has a mission: to connect care facilities with experienced managers. HealthWorks is positioned to help bridge the healthcare workforce shortage, ensuring uninterrupted operation of care services nationwide.

Its proven five-step process simplifies the recruitment journey:

Assessment: A personalised phone call to comprehend unique situations.

Recommendation: Healthworks identifies the most fitting interim or permanent managers from its expansive network.

Meeting: Select the manager/s best aligned with your organisation's culture.

Arrangement: Healthworks helps organise a start date, and any other required provisions.

Support: Ongoing support and updates to ensure a successful placement as part of the Healthworks package.

“Our friendly team at HealthWorks is made up of passionate individuals with extensive experience in the care sector,” says spokesperson Millie Powell.

“We’ve witnessed firsthand the very real challenges in healthcare recruitment,” she adds, “and our team is committed to meeting the diversity in care staffing needs with skill, compassion, and care.”

HealthWorks has been recognised in prestigious industry awards such as Employer of the Year, Registered Manager Award, Support Worker of the Year, Great Autism Practice Award, and Care Group of the Year.

As the sector continues to navigate the staffing shortfall, HealthWorks stands ready to help bridge the healthcare workforce gap and ensure provision of high-quality care services for all.
