The market for timeshares is limited. The market value for a timeshare is also limited. As a result, sales of timeshares are informal. The buyer and seller do not use appraisal and title insurance services. The seller must pay in full any outstanding loan. The dollar amount exchanged is nominal, less than a few thousand.

Because of a timeshare's low market value, owners often give away their timeshare. The gift can be a win-win. The current owner avoids ongoing maintenance fees. The new owner has the use of a timeshare with no upfront investment.

Timeshare owners use a deed to remove one spouse as owner in a divorce or dissolution of marriage or to add a new co-owner. Finally, persons with a trust use deeds to fund their trust.
