"Driven by our legacy of being patient-centered, our growth in Texas is an assertion of Acadian Health's commitment to pioneering healthcare access and outcomes," expressed Acadian Health Director Benjamin Swig. "By opening up access to acute and chronic care into homes, we are making healthcare more equitable,

Texas, with its unique healthcare challenges ranging from underserved areas to communities with limited medical services, stands to benefit immensely from Acadian Health's holistic approach. Its mobile healthcare clinicians preemptively address patient needs before they escalate and integrate a live virtual visit with primary care providers. A testament to its efficacy, Acadian Health has recorded a 97% success rate over the past decade in treating applicable patients at home rather than in emergency departments.

Acadian Health's team emphasizes collaboration with local healthcare providers to improve patient satisfaction and care coordination, and achieve quality patient health outcomes, reducing total cost of care for both the patient and the payer source.

At-home acute care focuses on treating applicable illnesses and conditions that cannot be addressed by a telehealth visit alone: respiratory exacerbations, nausea, vomiting with dehydration, non-narcotic pain management, and other potentially preventable events that lead patients to seek care in emergency departments. At-home patient engagement includes conducting transitional or discharge follow-up care; identifying patient-centered goals and managing SDOH referrals, patient education and care plan follow-up; prenatal and postpartum care; chronic condition care management; routine and annual vaccinations; and blood draws for lab analysis.

Acadian Health Director of Operations Richard Belle emphasized, "Our symbiotic collaborations with health plans, hospitals, and providers in these cities allow us to amplify our patient-focused model through in-home healthcare."

"We have seen a tremendous increase in patient volume over the past six months, and have grown our team to fulfill additional contracts with healthcare providers," Swig said. "Our mobile health paramedics, EMTs and licensed vocational nurses (LVNs) have been working diligently with providers and health plans to provide alternative care options for our patients, and we are seeing the success in their overall care and well-being."

Marking a new chapter in healthcare, Acadian Health's expansion not only bridges service gaps but also integrates telemedicine for a more modernized approach. "By leveraging digital platforms and empowering our paramedic clinicians with evidence-based medicine knowledge
