According to the International Association of Golfing Tour Operators (IAGTO), the global golf tourism market was valued at more than $17 billion in 2018, out of which the U.S. is reported to be the largest market in terms of golf as a sport. However, UK, Japan, and Australia, along with the U.S., have witnessed stagnation in terms of a number of dedicated golfers, because of the change in the interest of youth towards other sports and the aging retired population is now taking up this sport as a recreational activity. Asia and Middle East are witnessing fastest rates in the Golf Club and Sets Industry. Growth in the middle-class population and an increase in investments in infrastructure to support the game drive the growth of the golf sector.

Furthermore, an upsurge in the state, national, and international level competitions conducted by various governments across the world is leading to increased participation and developing interest of the youth in sports activities. This in turn has resulted in increased demand for golf club & sets, which significantly contributes to the overall growth of the Golf Club and Sets Industry

The rise in penetration of the internet, smartphones, computers, and other electronic media & entertainment devices has significantly increased the involvement of children and youth in indoor activities. This has resulted in diminished health and deterioration of skills & abilities of this population, which in turn has declined the interest and rate of participation in sports and reduced sales of sports equipment and apparel. Thus, the decline in interest of children and the young population in sports including golf, owing to mounting interest in media & entertainment devices restrains the market growth.
