The Growth of Latino-Owned Businesses In recent years, Latino-owned businesses have experienced remarkable growth, outpacing the average business significantly. A study by Stanford University reveals that Latino-owned businesses have achieved a staggering 34% growth rate, in stark contrast to the mere 1% growth observed across all businesses. Latinos in the United States have injected a remarkable $2.3 trillion into our economy, making it equivalent to the fifth-largest global economy. Despite comprising 19% of the U.S. population, Latinos still face underrepresentation and stereotyping in various sectors, including media, where only 7% of workers are Latino, and a mere 3% are Latina.

This discrepancy extends to the fields of film, television, and news, as well as book authors, editors, and publishers. A recent report by the U.S. Government Accountability Office underscores that from 2010 to 2019, the percentage of media workers who are Latino or Latina grew by only 1%, compared to a 3% rise for Latinos in other fields.

The "Breaking the Glass Ceiling" book seeks to address this disparity, change the narrative, empower Latina women to achieve upward mobility and foster wealth creation by sharing the inspirational stories of accomplished Latinas who can serve as role models in leadership and representation.

About "Breaking the Glass Ceiling"

"Breaking the Glass Ceiling" is an anthology that challenges the status quo, transforms narratives, and transcends barriers within the realms of business, entrepreneurship, and the corporate world.

Meet The Authors:

The authors of each share their unique stories of battles, struggles, and triumphs. Among them is Johanna Quintana, who, at seventeen years old, courageously crossed the border on a wooden box and later became the founder and CEO of two thriving businesses, creating job opportunities for hundreds of women in her community.

The book also introduces readers to Julissa Alvarez, who hails from a small village in the Dominican Republic and overcame extreme poverty to become the CEO of Brimela Lux Events & Brimela Routes Corp, as well as becoming Vice-President of one of the most prestigious institutions in U.S. higher education.

Neily Soto, another featured author, navigates living in two worlds. Growing up in subsidized housing, she recognized an opportunity in real estate, becoming an investor and developer. She is now running as one of the first Latinas for the city council in her community.

These remarkable women exemplify family values, financial freedom, and tenacity in the United States, contributing to its rich tapestry. They represent various industries, including entrepreneurship, corporate leadership, real estate, mortgage brokerage, event planning, investment, and coaching:
