Oakland's legacy with cannabis is rich and complex. The city has consistently championed cannabis legalization and has always advocated for a balanced, equitable approach. Since California embraced Proposition 64 in 2016, legalizing recreational cannabis for adults aged 21 and above, Oakland has been at the epicenter of progressive change. With the Cannabis Equity Program, Oakland has risen as a vanguard, offering priority licensing, technical assistance, and financial incentives to those affected most by past cannabis prohibition. By enabling an inclusive and diverse cannabis business ecosystem, Oakland paves the way for a brighter, more equitable future in the industry. Personal cultivation, with a limit of six plants per residence, is also allowed, emphasizing the city's trust in its citizens' responsible use. The spirit of Oakland insists on safe consumption, allowing it only in private spaces, ensuring community welfare.
