"Reviewed By K.C. Finn for Readers' Favorite

The Keepers of The Contingent World is a work of fiction in the science fiction, adventure, and action subgenres. The work forms the seventh book of the Lightning Brain

Series and continues the new generation of the Keepers storyline. Penned by Cliff Ratza, the story continues for adult and young adult readers with Irani and Indira, who must now face the responsibility of caring for two sets of twins destined to continue the Keepers legacy. After imprisonment, rescue, confusion, and chaos, you'd think that the former Electra Kittner would need a break from it all, but conspiracy and the threat of presidential assassination throw our central hero back into the fray once more.

Author Cliff Ratza has so much to give and so many new inventions for the Lightning Brain Series that it's nothing short of incredible to still see new inventive twists and turns when we're seven novels in. As usual, the action sequences are absolutely packed with cinematic detail and tense wordplay that quite literally explodes onto the page, with some really tender moments as the younger generation of characters come to terms with the gravitas of the situation they are soon to be more deeply involved in. Irani gets a lot of time to shine in this tale, with a deeply-considered narrative that allows for a fascinating insight into how her personality and perspective have been shaped by the harrowing adventures of her life thus far. Overall, fans of the existing series will certainly want to catch The Keepers of The Contingent World, and I, for one, can't wait to see what's coming next in this engrossing science fiction series."
