

Witness at House Foreign Affairs Hearing: Sanction Liberian President for Link to Child Sacrifice

Humanitarians in Africa cite a trend: child sacrifice to harvest organs and body parts.

WASHINGTON, D.C., UNITED STATES, September 22, 2023 /

EINPresswire.com/ -- A witness who testified Tuesday during a U.S. House Foreign Affairs subcommittee hearing named the president of Liberia and two past presidents of the African nation among those involved in widespread ritualistic child sacrifice. He recommended U.S. sanctions to stop child sacrifice.

We have to name and shame, and we have to expose these people.”

Alan White, Co-Executive Director, Advocacy Foundation for Human Rights

“Nobody wants to be sanctioned by the U.S. government,” said Alan White, Ph.D., co-executive director of the Advocacy Foundation for Human Rights and expert on war crimes in Africa.

“We have to name and shame, and we have to expose these people,” White told the Subcommittee on Global Health and Global Human Rights and International Organizations. The Sept. 19 hearing was on Efforts to Address Ritual Abuse and Sacrifice in Africa.

White named former Liberian Presidents Charles Taylor and Ellen Johnson Sirleaf in connection with child sacrifice, a practice many Africans believe helps politicians win elections.

“The same problems continue under the current president: George Manneh Weah,” White said.

Reports of increased ritualistic child sacrifice during the October to December election season extend beyond Liberia, witnesses from Sierra Leone, Uganda and Ghana said. The trend extends beyond politics, too.

Miriam Fullah, a human trafficking protection manager with World Hope International, told the story of a child sacrifice survivor from Sierra Leone. A native doctor, Fullah said, had advised a man in his 50s that to have business success, he must "spill the blood of a virgin." To comply, the man raped his girlfriend's daughter; the girl nearly bled to death. She was 8.

"The culture of silence is huge," Fullah said. "We have to help people speak out."

Another witness, Obed Byamugisha, a program adviser for Kyampisi Childcare Ministries in Uganda, testified about rescuing more than 28 children who survived sacrifice. Byamugisha said he has buried many more — 90% of children abducted for sacrifice die, he said, and most survivors are debilitated by missing limbs and private parts that were cut off for use in potions made by witch doctors.

"Witchcraft is everywhere in Africa," he said.

In Uganda each week, Byamugisha said, a child is reported killed for body parts.

"The worst experience is hearing a child trying to fight for life," he said.

Byamugisha urged the subcommittee to amend the Trafficking Victims Protection Reauthorization Act to include child sacrifice as a severe form of human trafficking. The U.S. federal law provides resources to combat human trafficking domestically and worldwide. An amendment would require approval of the reauthorization by both the House and Senate.

Child Sacrifice

PROBLEM

In 2023, ritualistic child sacrifice occurs in areas of Africa because of superstition-fueled demand for traditional healers who promise health, wealth and political power. Sometimes called "witch doctors," these people charge customers for casting good luck spells using harvested body parts from children.

SOLUTION

Create campaigns to raise awareness. Share information. Perform policy research. Advocate.

Elyssa Schroeder, a doctoral candidate at the University of Georgia's Center on Human Trafficking Research & Outreach, at right, congratulates Miriam Fullah, a Sierra Leone human trafficking witness with World Hope International, after Fullah's testimony.

Several subcommittee members responded to witness testimony on child sacrifice in Africa.

“This is insane that it’s been allowed,” said Rep. Christopher Smith, R-N.J., chair of the subcommittee.

Rep. Susan Wild, D-Penn., ranking member of the subcommittee, said the witness testimony was hard to hear.

“I don’t think that we, as a country, can claim the mantle of being a world leader and the most powerful country in the world unless we use our resources and, quite frankly, our privilege to fight against exploitation of all humans around the world, and especially children,” Wild said.
