The shortlisted National Winners will now proceed to a further round of rigorous judging by an independent panel of more than 40 judges who will gather to determine the region's best overall project in each category – to be announced at a gala awards reception on 22 November at the Address Hotel, Dubai Marina.

The awards ceremony will culminate in the announcement of the prestigious Project of the Year award, which in past years has included iconic projects such as ICD Brookfield Place in Dubai, the Louvre Museum in Abu Dhabi and the Haramain high-speed railway in Saudi Arabia.

"The National Winners are proof that the region's projects community is constantly working towards delivering solutions with incredible innovation and excellence," said MEED head of content and research, Ed James.

"We are thrilled to recognise the organisations that have been shortlisted and given National Winner status, and wish to congratulate all the individuals and teams that have contributed to delivering these exciting projects that drive development in the region," James added.

Commenting on the submissions this year, Sonia Kerrigan, group commercial director, MEED, said, "We are truly inspired by the overwhelming number of entries for the MEED Project Awards this year, which is a clear reflection of resilience and unwavering commitment to excellence within the region's projects market."

Kerrigan added that the level of innovation in this year's submissions has again raised the bar. These submissions are a clear testament to the region's dynamism and its reputation as a hub for construction innovation and excellence.

"Mashreq is proud to extend its support to the MEED Projects Awards as MEED announces the 2023 National Winners and the extraordinary projects completed across the region," said Arun Mathur, Mashreq's executive vice president and global head of Contracting Finance.

"It is extremely encouraging to see the relentless pursuit of excellence and innovations that have contributed to the highlighted projects this year. We look forward to the Awards celebration later in November when we will be part of the MENA Winners announcements."
