admission to the University of Arkansas School of Law in 1946 but was denied. Davis never gave up, and stayed in touch with the law school, and in 1947, he was offered admission under harsh discriminatory conditions. He rejected the offer and finished his law studies at Howard University in Washington, D.C. in 1949, and returned to Arkansas to practice law. 71 years later, the University of Arkansas School of Law awarded him an honorary jurist doctorate degree on May 18, 2017. Judge Davis filed litigation to integrate Mansfield public schools in 1955. It was a victory on paper, but because so many white citizens threatened violence, the integration did not happen immediately.

Davis also collaborated with the late Justice Thurgood Marshall on “Brown vs. Board of Education, Topeka, Kansas.” It was a landmark ruling by the U.S. Supreme Court making racial segregation in public schools unconstitutional. In 1959, continuing his fight for justice and the rights to a good education. He won another lawsuit, forcing the integration of Fort Worth, Texas schools. Later in life, an elementary school was named in his honor on Campus Drive in Fort Worth. “I have never experienced a book on my life. I am a happy old man. This is a book for all ages. You learn that life and education is a process throughout your lifetime. I encourage everyone to read this book. I hope that my life has been a good example of how to live, share and be an example to others,” said Judge L. Clifford Davis. Judge Davis is living history. It is not often that we can celebrate a legend while he is still here. This book is written to have a positive impact on our youth and the entire family and especially to inspire kids to take their education seriously and be lifelong learners.
