In his book Grace Under Pressure: Leading Through Change and Crisis, John Baldoni argues that leaders need to do three things when times are tough: take care of their people, take care of themselves, and prepare for the future. He also emphasizes that leaders should do all of this with a sense of grace, meaning calmly, collectedly, and compassionately.

Baldoni, a highly sought-after executive coach, has worked with senior leaders in a variety of industries, including pharmaceutical, real estate, packaged goods, automobiles, finance, and healthcare. He shares his expertise in this book, focusing on how leaders can prepare for change
