"Our Defense and Aerospace OEM partners flow down stringent quality management systems and test standard requirements," said Chad Spikes, Vice President of Quality Assurance and Regulatory Compliance at A2 Global Electronics. "As a result, our CAAP accreditation is a testament to the value that A2 provides our customers, that they can rest assured they are sourcing the highest quality components."

The PRI CAAP accreditation ensures the risk of counterfeit components entering the supply chain is mitigated throughout the aviation, space, and defense industries. Companies must go through a stringent audit and accreditation process that validates their procedures in fact protect against the introduction of counterfeit parts and identifies any areas of improvement. The CAAP AC7402 auditing criteria specifically certifies distributors' processes for the avoidance, detection, mitigation, and disposition of counterfeit electronic components.

"This is an impressive achievement, with their ability to meet demanding industry and customer requirements, now recognized globally," said Jay Solomond, Executive Vice President and Chief Operating Officer at the Performance Review Institute. "I am delighted to congratulate A2 Global for their dedication and professionalism which has led to their CAAP AC7402 accreditation achievement".

A2 has received several certifications and accreditations prior, including AS6171, AS9120, AS6081, ISO 14001, ISO 45001, and ISO/IEC 17025:2017, all of which ensure control, traceability, and efficacy of components.
