Definition:

Meal vouchers are a type of employee benefit that employers can provide to their employees as a form of non-cash compensation. These vouchers are typically given to employees to purchase food and beverages at designated restaurants and stores, and they can be used for both dine-in and take-out options. Employee benefits solutions, like meal vouchers, can also have financial benefits for both the employer and the employee. For example, meal vouchers are typically tax-free up to a certain amount, so employees can save money on their food expenses. Employers can also benefit from tax breaks and cost savings, as meal vouchers are often more cost-effective than offering employees cash bonuses or salary increases.
