Despite immense success, Zilberberg has remained grounded, committed to giving back to his community, and, in tandem, established The Zilberberg Foundation, whose mission cradles world peace initiatives. The Foundation will help people experiencing homelessness by providing education that liberates them from their present circumstances. One of its many goals is to build affordable housing for Americans to serve as a launchpad of ease for building equity, wealth, passive income, and generational wealth. Additionally, the non-profit serves children with cancer, youth with disabilities, and

On the first floor of Zilberberg Towers' six-story enterprise, the Zilberberg Foundation Library will give the gift of reading to the community and share fundamental strategies with children starting at an early age to learn how to earn, save and invest money, establish good credit, and work hard. Zilberberg and a team of educators will teach young Nevadans how to negotiate, build wealth, and live each day with patience and perseverance. The goal is to set its patrons up for success, regardless of hardship, and armor them with the education needed to survive and prosper. Also, on the main floor, its prototype includes a retail space, gallery, and recording studio to support music and arts and showcase local talent. Zilberberg International has high hopes of building a bridge to connect the library to the school across the street for ease of access and safety for the students.

In a nod to sustainability and cost-efficiency, the project will predominantly use concrete for the library and wood for the subsequent floors, which are earmarked for affordable housing. Zilberberg International is currently in the process of selecting the right architectural expertise to bring this vision to fruition. The timeline for Zilberberg Towers #1 is estimated at a maximum of five years from ideation to completion, with a two-year planning phase.
