Definition:

Military radar systems are advanced electronic systems specifically designed and employed by military forces and defense organizations for various purposes related to surveillance, reconnaissance, and threat detection. These radar systems use radio waves to detect, locate, track, and identify objects in the air, at sea, or on the ground. They play a crucial role in military operations, providing situational awareness, early warning, and target acquisition capabilities. Military radar systems are used to monitor large areas of airspace, maritime zones, or land territories to detect and track objects such as aircraft, ships, ground vehicles, and potential threats. Air defense radar systems are designed to detect and track incoming aircraft, missiles, drones, and other aerial threats. They are crucial for protecting airspace and guiding interceptor systems. Ground-based radar systems are used for monitoring land territories, tracking ground vehicles, detecting infiltrations, and providing situational awareness on the battlefield.
