determination, passion, and unwavering ambition.

Growing up on her father's farm, Willa Mae's youthful rebellion against picking cotton marked the beginning of a remarkable journey. Infused with an innate love for dance and an undeniable dream of becoming a dance star, she embraced her artistic calling with fervor. As she swayed to the rhythm of her own aspirations, Willa Mae's dance performances became a harmonious blend of movement and melody, as her captivating voice joined the dance floor in a symphony of expression.

But the boundaries of artistry couldn't confine Willa Mae's boundless talent. Her journey took an unexpected turn when she ventured into acting, a decision that would lead her to a groundbreaking milestone. In 1939, Willa Mae took on a co-starring role in the iconic race movie "The Devil's Daughter," a cinematic masterpiece that defied norms and shattered stereotypes. Filmed in the vibrant backdrop of Kingston, Jamaica, this off-Hollywood production featured an all-black cast and storyline, delivering a powerful narrative that resonated far beyond the silver screen.

Willa Mae and Harvey's commitment stands out in their enthusiastic involvement. They actively engage in partnerships with fellow artists.
