These young people who need our help represent a new generation. I see the printing industry as being able to help the youth and come together for the good of both.”

have told me that to succeed in business, you have to be willing to work together for the good of all. It comes with a team concept. That is exactly what I learned in my 19 years of playing professional baseball. It shaped me and allowed me to become the person I am," says Baseball Hall of Famer Mariano Rivera in an interview featured in The Cannata Report.

Rivera discusses his foundation, dedicated to assisting at-risk youth through education and mentorship programs, with The Cannata Report, the leading intelligence resource for the document imaging channel in the office technology industry, and talks about the Mariano Rivera Foundation's Print Design and Packaging Development program, an initiative to educate young men and women to pursue careers in the printing industry.

"These young people who need our help represent a new generation. Through no fault of their own, they have very little in the way of opportunity to build a future. I see the printing industry as being able to help the youth and come together for the good of both," says Rivera.

In the interview with Frank G. Cannata, founder of The Cannata Report, Rivera talks candidly about what motivates him to give back, what he learned from Yankee manager Joe Torre about the importance of teamwork, and how his foundation's Print Design and Packaging Development program is educating and training young men and women to work in the print industry that produces packaging materials like cardboard that as a kid he used to make a baseball glove.
