Gluten-free beverages are made of gluten-free grains buckwheat. The growing urge to seek gluten-free dietary options to manage health conditions such as celiac disease, gluten sensitivity, autism, ADHD, multiple sclerosis, and IBS (Irritable Bowel Syndrome) has provided a positive scope to the market demand for gluten-free beverages As more consumers become conscious of the potential adverse effects of gluten consumption, there has been a corresponding surge in demand for gluten-free products.

The market is observing various product launches and advancements. For instance, in July 2023, Campbell launched two gluten-free cooking soups namely “Gluten Free Cream of Chicken” and “Gluten Free Cream of Mushroom”. Gluten-Free Cream of Chicken is made with chicken meat with no antibiotics and farm-fresh cream and Gluten-Free Cream of Mushroom is made with mushrooms, garlic, farm-fresh cream, and no preservatives. Also, in March 2023 the Worcester Brewery launched SHOOK, a new line of gluten-free alcoholic beverages. The drinks are made out of fermented cane sugar and fruit juice. Coming in at 8% ABV, they’re potent and gluten-free. The initial two flavors are cocktail-inspired: Mai Tai and Cape Codder and will be sold in four pks of 10 oz.
