About Italy Aviation & Aerospace industry

The Italian aviation Industry ranks 4th in Europe and 7th in the world by size, with leadership positions in civil helicopters, regional aircraft and propulsion. The technological skills and know-how of Italian aeronautics and space companies, combined with the increasingly advanced technological knowledge in production processes, have become critical growth drivers for Italy in the sector.

Italy has several major aerospace companies. Italy also has numerous small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs) specialized in various aerospace and aviation aspects. These SMEs often form clusters, which are geographically concentrated areas where companies, research institutions, and other organizations collaborate and support each other.

Its research institutions further support Italy's strong presence in aerospace and aviation. The Italian Space Agency (ASI) plays a crucial role in space research and development. It collaborates with international partners on missions and projects, including the European Space Agency (ESA).
