“Heather brings both a business and clinical background to further RadSite’s mission,” notes Garry Carneal, JD, RadSite’s president and chief executive officer. “She is a dynamic and innovative thinker who will help RadSite promote evidence-based standards in imaging. Her background in genetics and genomics is a significant resource for RadSite as the accreditation agency moves to a more sophisticated approach to benchmarking performance.”

“I am excited to join RadSite and help take the organization to the next level,” adds King. “RadSite is made up of many talented employees, consultants, and accreditation reviewers. I am looking forward to collaborating with the whole team as we automate our accreditation review process while reinforcing our personal touch with every accreditation applicant. I am also looking forward to a strong partnership with the expert volunteers that serve on RadSite's Accreditation Committee ."

King received her Executive MBA from Jack Welch Management Institute, where she is now a professor in Business Communications and Executive Presence. She is currently enrolled at Liberty University's doctoral program in Health Sciences.

RadSite, recognized by the U.S. Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services as an official accreditation organization, offers an innovative and cost-effective choice for imaging accreditation.
