“The group is honored to keep doing what we love with the new songs featuring some amazing talent,” said Fish Scales, Nappy Roots Co-founder and artist. “It’s a great thing to be a part of the many changes in hip-hop and getting to experience the great topics, concepts and new artists that are coming out of the genre.”

Nappy Roots members hail from Kentucky and Georgia, coming onto the music scene with the mixtape, “Country Fried Cess,” in 1998 during the rise of southern hip-hop. The group has gone on to release eight more albums, including 2002’s best selling hip-hop album, “Watermelon, Chicken & Grits.” The kings of “rural rap” have also received two GRAMMY nominations and multiple RIAA platinum certifications with hits “Awnaw,” “Po’ Folks” and “Good Day.”

To celebrate the single release, the group along with its brewery, Atlantucky Brewing, hosted a public “NAPPY4LIFE” album listening party on Oct. 26.
