Singers yearned for connection. To address this challenge, the innovative musicians behind this amazing documentary, Bryce and Kathryn Denney, built an online community around a clever idea: "parking lot choirs." Singers, safely harmonizing through their car radios, gained national attention. "The Drive to Sing" is a feel-good documentary that tells the story of resilience, innovation, and the incredible impact of music when it was most needed.

As traditional musical gatherings became impossible, this creative approach not only connected musicians but also created a strong sense of community that resonates with audiences. The documentary offers an inspiring look at how people with a shared love for music found unique ways to persevere and bring joy during challenging times.

"The Drive to Sing" celebrates the human spirit, the power of art, and the lengths to which people will go for the privilege of making music together. It's a tribute to the enduring strength of music as a source of comfort and inspiration during tough times.
