

Ethno-Ambient Tribal Artists Frore and Shane Morris Present Their Latest Collaboration Album: Ochre

Frore and Shane Morris collaborate on Ochre, with old meeting new, percussion joining synths; the album released worldwide today on Spotted Peccary Music.

PORTLAND, OR, USA, November 17, 2023 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Ochre, the stunning fourth collaborative release on Spotted Peccary Music from veteran artists Frore (Paul Casper) & Shane Morris, takes its name from the reddish-brown petroglyphs in ancient caves. Inspired by these timeless works, revered for ages after those who painted them have perished, Ochre seems to ask the question: "What does it mean to make something that lives on after you're gone?"

With sounds of past and present, analog and digital, earthbound and electric, it also dares to respond. On Ochre, Frore & Morris refine the interplay between synthesizers and percussion elements into a more succinct revelation of their ethno-ambient sound. The opening track sets the tone as "From Spark to Flame" rises from a rumble into a hypnotic polyrhythm as Udu drum accents dance around an anchoring indigenous frame drum and modular synth bass line. On "Formations," Morris's distant gong crescendos behind Frore's lush textures, the ghostly hum of the wind through an austere landscape. Finale "Waiting for Eternity" swells and echoes, careening into vastness. Yearning pulses beneath its drifting chords: an inquisitive mind wondering what will be remembered when time has turned our world to dust.

Morris has found many ways to imagine this territory. "I believe we both are inspired by archeology and new discoveries, particularly from the prehistoric eras. Witnessing these environments always seem to trigger the imagination of what was and may have been.”

Frore seeks to fuse technology with historic imagery and sound design. “It never gets old for me, to imagine how far back our ancestors go. The terror of life, but more importantly, the awe they must have felt observing the natural world around them.”

Frore, aka Paul Casper, is always seeking to fuse what he calls “primitive sounds” with current technology.

Picturesque in its ethno-ambient austerity owing much to previous legacies and visionary expressions, Ochre paints sweeping vistas for the listener: an arch of crimson shale over sun-cracked desert, dust swept up in a cyclone, blown like breath through the mouth of a cave, and inside: a pattern on the wall, a symbol, a scene, a memory. The painters pass on, but what they paint in ochre remains.

Inspired by nature, patterns, and systems, Shane Morris shapes ethereal realms, polyrhythmic grooves, and tribal soundscapes.

About Frore:

The music of Frore has been featured on the Hearts of Space radio show, the Star's End radio show and is frequently played on Stillstream.com, the ambient radio channel among other outlets. Paul has a unique approach to ambient music, always seeking to fuse what he calls "primitive sounds" with current technology. Paul isn't sure why he uses so many world fusion and tribal sounds in his Frore music project. As a child, he always wanted to discover lost indigenous tribes in the forest, loving the mystery and excitement surrounding such a concept. To Paul, his music makes him realize how nothing much changes with people, that music is a fundamental human impulse and an attempt to make sounds to "fight off the loneliness."

About Shane Morris:

Shane Morris is a percussionist, synthesist, and composer of ambient electronic music. Inspired by nature, patterns, and systems, he shapes ethereal realms, polyrhythmic grooves, and tribal soundscapes using a variety of acoustic and electronic instruments, processing, hardware and software. A solo artist since 2008, Shane's interests span most areas of the ambient genre from dark to light, space to melodic, beatless to beats. Shane is an avid live performer and improviser playing regularly at City Skies and Electro-Music festivals, as well as numerous live internet performances. He also holds a BA in Anthropology and Music with an emphasis in "Trance" and has been playing music professionally for nearly 20 years. SHANEMORRISMUSIC.COM
